81°   🚗 19   SUBSCRIBE NOW   👤
                                                    As low as 99¢

If infertility is now a disease, why doesn't insurance cover it?

f 🐦 ↗   1

Nicole Villalpando

July 12, 2017 Filed in children, family, fatherhood, health, motherhood, pregnancy.

In June, the American Medical Association recognized the World Health Organization's policy that classifies infertility as a disease.

The statement that its delegates voted on: "Resolve that our American Medical Association support the World Health Organization's designation of infertility as a disease state with multiple etiologies requiring a range of interventions to advance fertility treatment and prevention."

Would more women be able to conceive if infertility treatments were covered by insurance? Ohio State University Wexner Medical Center